CRYSTAL THOUGHT CONDENSER

By Sam Dalal

This is a cute pocket effect that you will enjoy performing, time and time again. It was not meant for magicians, although we have fooled many a performer with this. However, we advise you to use this exclusively for the lay audience, who are totally unaware of both the principles involved.

ONE EFFECT: A card is selected from an ordinary deck by a spectator. The performer now displays a small solid crystal cube, which is completely transparent. The cube is about $\frac{3}{4}$ th of an inch in size and is held between your finger and thumb. You allow the spectators to see that there is absolutely nothing in the cube - allowing them to see all six sides of the cube, right under their noses.

You explain that the cube is a "THOUGHT LENS" which condenses and focuses thought, just as an optical lens condenses and focuses light. If your audience is aware of it - you can even draw the analogy of how a lens can form a REAL image of a flame etc.,

You now ask the spectator to focus his thoughts - (those of the selected card) on the "Lens", while you turn and twist it, as if to bring it in the correct "line of thought". The turning and twisting also enables the audience to see that the cube is completely transparent. If you like, you could also show your hands "clean".

Suddenly a small miniature replica of the selected card appears IN THE CENTRE of the cube. You read it off - revealing the spectator's card, and the spectators can see the image for themselves. Then just as suddenly, the image vanishes, leaving the cube as clear as before. You can now toss the cube out for examination - (we tell you how) - though it is not essential!

Of course, instead of the card you could have a word or number appear on the cube. The cube comes ready to work for the card effect described, but could just as easily be modified in a few minutes for some other "image"
