STAGGERING SEGREGATION

From a small plastic wallet, the magician removes a number of playing cards. Half of these are red suits, half are black. Cards are shuffled together by a spectator.

Magician takes the cards and deals them one from the top, one from the bottom, in two separate piles. Miraculously, when the cards are shown, the reds and the blacks have been separated into two sets.

The effect can be immediately repeated, - finally, all the cards are left with the audience to examine.
